For the first time one of the greatest figureheads in the financial world, Martin Armstrong, comes to Thailand to share his knowledge. This exclusive two-day conference held at one of Bangkok's best hotels is the chance for investors on all scales as well as those working in the financial sector to get up close with Martin and learn his techniques and outlooks based on over five decades in the highest end of the business.

From becoming a millionaire at just 15 to the founder of Princeton Economics – Martin's success and reputation has him touted as one of the best economists alive today. His encyclopaedic knowledge of past economic events, insights into current global financial events and his prophetic forecasts of future turns are legendary. He has extensive experience for many decades at the highest levels with currency, foreign exchange and international monetary systems. His advice has been sought by governments and fortune 500 companies alike. And for the first time at the World Economic Conference, Martin brings his expertise to Thailand.

The symposium has been specifically created to have a classroom type-feel so attendees can interact with Martin for the most unique and productive experience. The aim of the event is to bring the global economy down to an integrated, understandable single entity. This will be exclusively a forecasting conference and Martin will be going over all the major world share markets, metals, agricultural, bonds, and currencies of Asia, North America, Europe, and Australasia. This is the chance for Thailand's business community to gain invaluable skills and information from the man who held the position of the highest paid advisor in the world.

Who is Martin Armstrong?

Mr. Martin Armstrong

Born in New Jersey in 1949, Martin's first brush with money was while working in a rare stamp and coin dealership as a teenager. His rare talents with money showed themselves at a young age when he became a millionaire at 15. By 21, he had his own store and also an interest in studying historical gold prices.

Through research he found that, on average, there had been a panic in the global economy every 8.6 years – a finding that was to be instrumental in his career. In the early seventies Martin became a trader and dealer in gold – compiling forecasts about commodities and currencies that he then sent onto clients. His success in this area led to his primary business becoming forecasting. It was at this time, in 1977, that he constructed an Economic Confidence Model, which he used to predict an upturn in the price of commodities.

Using the seemingly magical number of pi, after realising that the 8.6 year cycle he'd discovered was exactly pi times one thousand, he was able to predict future significant events in the markets. These included the Nikkei peak before the crash in December 1989 and the S&P high in 1998. He called his new strategy the 'Pi-cycle

Model' and it led to him being named the Economist of the Decade by Equity magazine as well as so respected in Japan, they knew him simply as Mr YEN. This capability made him the highest paid advisor in the world.

By 1999, after advising governments internationally including in China and Japan, Martin released a report on the number pi and its implications for his forecasting. In this same year the financial magnate was charged with defrauding Japanese investors – a charge he still refutes – and was jailed for nine years.

Martin is now back and remains a figurehead in economic forecasting – so much so his genius is still in huge demand the world over. His assessment of world economies has become renowned. With his model successfully pinpointing major specific days and events in international economies, it has provided one of the most consistent guides for understanding the turning points in the global economy and thus the business cycle not merely within a domestic economy, but within the global economy on a collective basis.

Known as a financial genius, there is no doubt that Martin Armstrong has the knowledge and know-how to help businesses and individuals get the advantage.
