

Hot Hand: If anybody ever had a hotter hand than Cal State L.A.'s Ray Lewis against Long Beach the other night, they best put it in ice and send it special delivery to the Hall of Fame before it burns down the town It's been said that the Diablos' full-court pressing defense is what rattled the 49ers into letting a seemingly cinch victory get away. Hardly It was Lewis' accurate bombing under pressure from one, two, sometimes three defenders on his neck. It wasn't his 53 points. It was the way he tossed them in—from outside at half a mile, from the corners and from the key, over, under and in between In this one, he also passed and he hawked It was poetry, enough to panic any opponent. Just a sophomore, good grief. What do you do for an encore, kid?
