

Our History

Walter Stuckmeyer (born in 1911) grew up on a farm at Kingshighway with his parents, brothers, and sisters in the 1920's. At that time, the location was on the outskirts of St. Louis. As the sons got married, they each bought farms and started their own families.

Walter married Marie Keller in 1935. They started the original Stuckmeyer farm on Pardee Road by Grant's Farm (Anheuser-Busch home and farm tour center) now farther out in St. Louis County. They farmed 4 acres with their 4 children. They farmed strictly for the wholesale market. In 1954 they bought 12 acres at the present location of Stuckmeyer's Farm and Market just outside of the St. Louis County limits in Jefferson County, Missouri. They worked the ground so that they could raise vegetables on this farm. Walter Stuckmeyer had four children. His two sons, Walter Jr. and Ralph continued to work the present farm.

In 1984, Ralph, Jean and their family started converting the farm into a retail business. The area around the farm was growing and more traffic was present. At first, they sold produce off an old farm wagon on what is now Old Highway 141, just a two-lane road. Later they built a market with just a gravel floor and a small greenhouse. As the years went by, they added to what is now the present produce market. The single greenhouse is now a combination of a little over an acre of connected greenhouses. Stuckmeyer's Farm and Market now consists of almost 200 acres from the original 12 acres at the present location.

Three of Ralph and Jean's children work full time on the farm. All six children and their families' still help with the farm. The Grandkids are now the fourth generation on the Stuckmeyer Farm and Market.
