Carter Baker

Baking & Brewing Roastery

BY: FAITH OSBORN

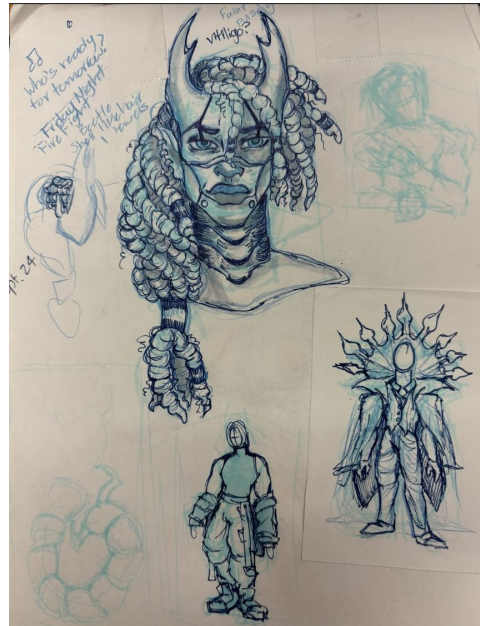

BACKGROUND:

This portfolio shows my ideas for a future coffee shop. I have always wanted to own a coffee shop or bakery, so this was me combining those ideas into one. Since I was a kid, I have loved to bake with my mom & sisters, and now that I am getting older, coffee is always my first drink option. This shop is for others to purchase both baked goods and coffee.

MISSION STATEMENT:

The purpose of this business is to create a good space for customers to relax and enjoy coffee and baked goods. I want the environment to feel safe and relaxing. This idea is combining two of my interests and sharing it with others around me.

1. Elizabeth Anderson's floral inspired still life is presented in professional fashion. Pieces such as this display her obvious raw talent and her forte for using pencil as her present desired medium.

2. Two spectators stop to witness the hidden secrets of their fellow classmates that make up Mike Thakur's display. Mike's project entitled "Leave a Whisper" was inspired by Frank Warren's "Past Secret".

ART SHOW

Through the years, people including Nelson Mandela, Martin Luther King Jr., and Gandhi have sought to shape the world into a place where color and gender were irrelevant and love ruled supreme. Inspired by art teacher Mrs. Densel's five week trip to Africa, the art department decided to recognize this experience and this idea by making it the theme of this year's art show. Titled "Connecting Communities", this year's art show brought people from all over the area to view the over 6,000 art pieces created by students K-12. Along with these 6,000 pieces, ten seniors were chosen through an application process to create portfolios of all of their completed works. This year, chairs painted by students were auctioned off in an effort to raise money for the art department as well as the local organization entitled "Spirit of Giving". All in all, the art show opened the eyes of all of its viewers and allowed them to witness the hidden talents of their local artists.
