Coming back to their native Washington from the Midwest Susan and Bob set their hearts on finding a colonial home. The one they found represented quite a challenge - having not been lived in for some years its windows were smashed, most of the plaster cracked and falling off the walls; they had to fight their way through waste-high weeds to get to the front door. The house is now a lovely, warm family home; a perfect backdrop for the antiques Susan has collected over the years from shops, markets and garage sales - restoring them herself.
