Looking back a week

Please notice the short letters below about our last issue. They reflect our enthusiasm about taking a new view of the communities in which we have been publishing newspapers for more than 60 years. The changed landscape of reporting on community news includes many special interest blogs such as the school districts in Seattle and Highline who wish to tell their story without filtering it through a traditional source. That is how you get one side of a picture. The function of your newspaper is to show you all sides, both positive and negative. That is why they still matter. That is what being objective means. Thanks for hanging in there. We have come a long way but there is so much more to see and we love going with you on the journey.

Finding a place

Looking ahead one week

We have been working on a story about growth in our towns from Des Moines to Ballard and how that growth has impacted your ability to find parking. When you decide to invade the business district of West Seattle or Ballard, you might find yourself coloring the air with words you don't want the kids to use. We get complaints about how tough it is to find a space in the Ballard core area since all those condos sprang up, displacing single family residences and not providing enough parking.

Why the city allows developers to crowd out parking previously available to the people already here is a bit of a conundrum. And yet it goes on at a remarkable pace. We sometimes cannot believe the land use applications for multiple-unit condos with parking for less than twenty-five percent of the intended occupants just because the structure would be located on a public transit line. This sort of social engineering catches the community by surprise.

Late last year, Burien got its first taste of private pay parking when Diamond made a deal with a dentist who owns a piece of land in Olde Town just off 152nd Street to make parkers pay on a dirt lot they enjoyed for years free. You just have to call a number and give your credit card information.

In West Seattle, merchants have for many years subsidized parking in the Junction area. Far seeing merchants bought land and pay for maintenance to insure their customers have a place that allows them to trade with them.

Love the format!

To the editor:

I picked up a copy of Westside Seattle at the Fauntleroy YMCA this morning, and was pleasantly surprised to see a couple articles about issues that I discuss with neighbors but don't see or hear anything about elsewhere in the media. Excellent publication! I can honestly say I read every word except the police report and the legal page.

I thoroughly enjoyed my first copy of Westside Seattle, have already promised this copy to a neighbor that I shared my enthusiasm with, and am looking forward future editions.

I don't know if the issues at the Fauntleroy YMCA were a fluke—but I would love to see them there again- or maybe at the Original Bakery—on a regular basis. Preferably the YMCA, because the walk to the bakery would mean a donut or a cookie with the paper!

Thanks for a great community resource. I travel quite a bit for work, love spending a rare Sunday at home with the Seattle Times, and will now be looking forward to making Westside Seattle an enjoyable way to stay informed about what's going on in West Seattle!

Oh, and I love the paper format as well. Very nice to read something on paper instead of a tiny screen!

Likes Jean Godden column

To the editor:

Jean Godden's new column is a breath of fresh air! What fun reading about Emmett Watson, a Seattle legend.

Although my husband and I live in the heart of Burien, we spend quite a bit of time in West Seattle for: Bakery Nouveau (coming to Burien in June!); yoga, the Sunday market, P.C.C, Met Market, in addition to many other places & businesses.

Your news is timely. Glad I missed that 35th St. sinkhole on Wednesday.

SDOT fixed the last pothole on top of 35th SW that was truly a traffic hazard but plenty more await the less than careful driver. Councilmember Herbold asked them to reexamine their plans and address the issue soon. SDOT said they would.

Herbold: 35th Avenue S.W. and Federal Funding Priorities: What she's done about it

District 1 Councilmember Lisa Herbold in her letter to constituents addresses the rapidly deteriorating condition of 35th S.W. and her efforts to get agencies to repair it. The Herald reported on a large pothole that formed in the 7300 block last week but it was only one of many that pockmark the road for several blocks.

Herbold's letter reads: "I recently sent two letters regarding transportation priorities.

First of all, I sent a letter to SDOT Director Scott Kubly regarding the condition of 35th Avenue S.W., which is one of only a few north/south arterials in West Seattle, and a key link to the West Seattle Bridge. I've received numerous complaints about the condition of the pavement since taking office at the start of 2016, and experienced the poor condition of the road in my travels. Complaints have increased recently.

The letter, details some of what I've heard from West Seattle residents, and requests, "please consider this letter a request to examine and repair potholes on 35th Avenue SW from Roxbury to Alaska. I'd appreciate an answer to this request as soon as possible."

In the longer term, the letter requests SDOT:

To reconsider their 2016-2024 paving plan, which lists 35th from Roxbury to Morgan as a planned paving project for 2023;

To provide the current pavement condition rating of 35th, according to the standards of SDOT's Pavement Management webpage;

Provide the estimated cost for the paving work on 35th, and

Whether they have an update to the 2013 Arterial Pavement Condition map included in the 2015 SDOT Asset Management Status and Condition Report (see Figure VII, page 68 of the report, page 74 of the pdf), which shows a significant portion of 35th as dark red, the worst rating.

I appreciated SDOT's quick response saying that "...later this month our crews will be doing a concerted effort to address potholes caused by the wet and cold winter. 35th Ave SW is on their plan as a route to be targeted."

SDOT also indicated they would be in touch later on my larger request re: modifying the pavement plan, and acknowledged that they have begun looking at the implications, as well as my request to re-evaluate the corridor.

PCC is coming to town

By Lindsay Peyton

PCC Natural Markets is about to set up shop in Burien.

The community-owned market, which was founded in Seattle in 1953, has found a spot for a new store in the Five Corners Shopping Center, 15840 1st Ave. S.—where Albertson's and Haggen Food and Pharmacy once operated.

"It was serendipity—a great location in a great community," CEO Cate Hardy said.

She explained that PCC keeps an eye out for ideal neighborhoods where it can expand its reach.

"It's a very organic process," she said. "Sometimes we go out and really want to be in a certain neighborhood and sometimes property owners call us."

Hardy added that she has received a number of requests for a PCC in the area from shoppers in Burien, Normandy Park and Des Moines.

"Those neighborhoods are thriving," she said.

A number of PCC members have moved from central Seattle to the southern part of King County, she added.

"They're looking for the same amenities they had in Seattle," she said. "We're always excited when we hear that we are wanted somewhere. We want to go where we are welcomed."

Chris Craig, Burien's economic development specialist, was part of the effort to bring PCC to town – and stands ready to welcome the store to the city.

"For years, residents have been vocal with both PCC and City staff about their desire for a store located in our community," he said. "When Haggen's exited the market, PCC was our first call."

He added that city economic development staff began contacting PCC about 18 months ago, providing community and demographic information and building the case for Burien.

Craig was eager to announce that the market will introduce 100 jobs to the area. "We are delighted that PCC will be a part of Burien's bright future," he said.

Hardy said the company hires locally – and also partners with area food banks.

She said teams are beginning to work on a major renovation of the 20,000-sq. ft. space.

"We will completely gut it," she said.

The process will take some time—and the store is expected to open in early 2018.

This location will feature the PCC Taqueria, which will serve up pork adobo, beef barbacoa, roasted squash and garbanzos, chicken verde and freshly prepared salsas.

"We make delicious burritos and taco salads," Hardy said. "We also make the best grab-and-go pizzas in town."

The PCC Café will serve hot coffee and tea, as well as baked goods made from scratch daily, including the store's trademark "crownie"—a cross between a brownie and chocolate chip cookie, drizzled with caramel.

Artists rendering of new PCC market to take the space previously occupied by Albertsons at Five Corners.

"We'll have a lot of great special features, as well as all the usual things you find at PCC," Hardy said. "Our produce departments are all 95 percent organic. We also have high standards for our health and beauty products and supplements."

The Burien store will be the first location designed for PCC by Seattle-based Graham Baba Architects. The firm will also design the co-op's West Seattle and Madison Valley stores.

Burien recognizes Citizen of the Year recipients

By Lindsay Peyton

The City of Burien recognized two of its most exemplary residents during a special reception held before its regular council meeting on Monday, April 3.

Wendy Meyers-Wenger, owner of Highline Tutoring Center, and Larry Cripe, president of the nonprofit Quiet Skies Coalition, took home the honors.

"We are grateful for the service that Larry and Wendy have given to the city," communications officer Emily Inlow-Hood said. "It takes engaged residents like them to make our community strong and vibrant."

Deputy mayor Nancy Tosta said recognizing residents who are dedicated to bettering Burien is an important cause.

"We have a lot of people who work on behalf of the community, who aren't always obvious but who make big contributions," she said. "They don't do it for recognition. They do it, because they care. This is an important pat on the back."

Meyers-Wenger was nominated by a friend and mentor, and was shocked when she discovered that she would receive the award.

"I said, 'You're kidding. I never win anything,'" she recalled. "I was very pleased and honored."

After majoring in early childhood education from Central Washington University, Meyers-Wenger took positions in a variety of positions, including working in day care, as a substitute teacher, in a head start program, in home and hospital teaching, as a teacher consultant and in adult education.

"My early childhood education blossomed into a little of everything," she said.

Then, she decided to open her own business in Burien, the Highline Tutoring and Testing Center, which she has operated for 34 years.

Her goal is to help her students become successful in all of their endeavors, and she has helped a wide range of ages and backgrounds to address their specific needs.

"If you listen to a student, they will tell you what their needs are," Meyers-Wenger said. "You have to listen, but some tutors don't do that. They just stick students in a program. We create our programs to fit the learning style of the student instead."

The citizen of the year award also came as a surprise to Cripe.

"It caught me totally off guard," he said. "I didn't even know the city did this every year. I thought I was undeserving of such an honor."

Cripe has led efforts to reduce noise from aircraft overhead. He is a retired pilot for Alaska Airlines and longtime resident of the city.

He first addressed the Burien City Council last summer in an attempt to determine why more planes were flying over his home. Residents who shared his concerns began reaching out after his appearance in City Hall. They joined forces and formed the nonprofit Quiet Skies Coalition.

"It all started with me being personally irritated with what was going on, because I knew something had changed," Cripe said. "Then I realized how many people were being impacted. It was the whole city of Burien, and actually this impacts all of Puget Sound."

He is now leading residents to advocate for Burien in negotiations with the Federal Aviation Administration.

"Unbridled expansion of the port, the Federal Aviation Administration and Alaska Air Group is going to have devastating effects," Cripe said. "This is a case where things need to be more thought out and more well planned."

He said starting the Quiet Skies Coalition has been eye-opening. "It's made me more of an activist than I started out to be," he said.

SERVING BALLARD SINCE 1891

Ballard native gave his 'All for Norway' for the experience of a lifetime on hit reality TV show

By Lori Ann Reinhall,
Seattle-Bergen Sister City Association

Upon first impression, one might think that Ballard native Lars Phillips is as American as apple pie: clean-cut, well-mannered, friendly and outgoing, with a smile that could win over the world. But after a few minutes in conversation, you learn that Lars is much more: he is as Ballard as lutefisk at Christmas, a product of our local Scandihoovian culture through and through. He attended Ballard High School, over the years he has attended more 17th of May parades than he can remember, and he even sponsors a Little League team called the "Ballard Nordics." This is only natural since his parents also grew up in Ballard. They first met at James Monroe Middle School, graduated from Ballard, and then started properly dating after college. The couple identified strongly with the Norwegian roots and celebrated their wedding with a kransekake. It was only natural that when their son came along, they would name him "Lars" and bring him up on krumkake and lefse. Their next-door neighbors were ekte norsk, genuine Norwegians straight off the boat from the old country. But no one taught Lars to speak Norwegian beyond the phrases he needed to survive in the neighborhood, "Uff da" and "Hipp, hipp, hurra," and the family never made it back to Norway together.

Lars was naturally curious about his roots, and when he read about a casting call for Norwegian Americans to travel back to the old country to appear in a new reality TV show called "Alt for Norge" (All for Norway) in the Ballard News Tribune, he jumped on the opportunity. He sent in an audition video, but in retrospect, he realized that he didn't know what they were looking for. But a first-time rejection didn't stop the intrepid Lars. When he heard that the show was doing an open casting call for Season 7 last year, he got right back in the ring, and this time he passed with flying colors. Soon he was bound for Norway, his homeland away from home.

Alt for Norge is all about teaching Scandinavian Americans about their ancestry and traditions, while giving the contestants a chance to meet their living relatives. A prerequisite is that the participants have never been to Norway but have a strong interest in connecting. They are there to learn what it means to be a "real Norwegian." Lars was perfect since he had not had any direct contact with his relatives prior to the show. He knew that his parents had visited the family farm in Tvedestrand about thirty-five years ago, but that was about it. He had heard that they, like most Norwegians, were quite reserved, but very kind and down-to-earth people, so he traveled to Norway with high hopes and expectations.

Once in Norway, Lars was greeted with open arms by a very open and accepting people. For six weeks, the show took him on an adventure from north to south, and everywhere he went, he was deeply impressed by the hospitality he met. Each week, the Americans would break out into teams and go through a competition that would teach them about some aspect of Norwegian culture. Along the way, they "lived like kings": they stayed in the best hotels when they weren't camping along the beautiful Stavanger coastline and they feasted in Michelin Star restaurants. In a show that is designed as a "travelogue with an American twist" for local viewers, they got to travel to parts of Norway that many Norwegians have never seen. Sometimes their experiences were a bit out of the ordinary: they attended goat cheese festival, in the fjord village of Stryn they spent the night in animal hides, Lars finally got to celebrate Syttende Mai in Norway, and they went as far off the beaten track to Vardø, north of the Arctic Circle. It is by no coincidence that Alt for Norge is called "The Great Norwegian Adventure" for English-speaking audiences. And when Lars was forced to leave the show when he was unable to recite a Norwegian tongue twister, his adventure was by no means over. Having earned $100 a day during the filming, he decided to use the money to travel through Europe and the Mideast, going as far as Cairo and Luxor.

When I asked Lars how the show had changed his life, he didn't hesitate that it was the people who had made the biggest impression on him, that "there are nice people everywhere you go." He learned that Norwegians are the happiest people in the world and admires their extremely positive outlook, and in the end he was prouder than ever to be of Norwegian heritage. He was impressed by the Norwegians' great national pride and willingness to help each other, and of course, he found the women to be "stunningly beautiful." Lars also became close friends with many of the other Alt for Norge alumni, many of whom live right here in the Pacific Northwest. With so much in common, no one really gets homesick on the show, and the connections are so strong, that two alumni friends are now happily married to each other in Olympia.

For Lars Phillips, appearing on the reality show was the chance of a lifetime, but his Norwegian adventure is far from over. While his relatives there saw him on TV, they didn't get a chance to meet in person, and Lars wasn't able to buy himself a bunad, a traditional Norwegian folk costume, so he is planning another trip back this year. In the meantime, the University of Washington graduate has managed to pass his exams as a Chartered Financial Analyst and Certified Financial Planner and is working as professional financial planner in Bellevue. With Alt for Norge, Lars Phillips was able to live out his Norwegian dream, and now he is living out his greater dreams and aspirations, following in the footsteps of his great role models. Like Phil Keoghan, the host of the Amazing Race, he is a reality show star in his own right; like Jack Bogle, the CFO of Vanguard, he is doing well in the investment industry; and like Rick Steves, he is going to "keep on traveling." It will be interesting see what's ahead for the young and upcoming Ballardite who gave his "all for Norway"—and we wish him well on his journey.

VALUABLE TIPS FOR PERSONAL WELLNESS

Move and stretch!

By Teanna Gentry

Spring has FINALLY sprung! The sunny skies are a welcomed sight to us Westside Seattle-ites after an above average gloomy Winter. Do you feel a big sluggish? Are your clothes fitting tighter than you would like, or is your body just feeling "blah?" I know it is easy to let the days pass during the darker days with more socializing, eating, drinking, and not very much exercise. I would encourage you in this new season to start something new, and get moving. With the rain letting up, I know many of us will get outside more with cleaning up the yard, kids sports games, and maybe even taking a nice stroll around the neighborhood. If you want something to kick your body into even more dynamic movement, I have some great dynamic stretches for you.

Whether you are just beginning your exercise regimen or are a seasoned workout guru, I would encourage you to just start somewhere. Pick one stretch and then work through a couple and then add on from there. Do the right and left side on the exercises that need it. Work on inhaling and exhaling for 10 slow breaths through each stretch before moving to the next. Your body and mind will benefit from the movement and the breathing. Did you know changing how you breathe is the fastest way to change how you feel? There is even a TED talk all about this and the healing power of our breath. Check out the complete talk here. <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=4Lb5L-VEm34&app=desktop>.

Teanna Gentry is a health and wellness guru from the Pacific Northwest who has a passion for helping people find freedom in movement. She was an all conference Track and Field athlete at Eastern Washington University from 2003-2007 and has since coached and trained athletes and clients of all ages in the greater Puget Sound area in running, yoga, speed/

The cake that won $10,000

Lindsay Peyton

West Seattle pastry chef Kristina Serfass is the owner of Baked, a custom cake boutique located on 2604 California Ave. S.W. She has taken home the grand prize from two episodes of Food Network's Cake Wars.

By Lindsay Peyton

West Seattle pastry chef Kristina Serfass just added a new flavor to her menu of offerings at Baked, a custom cake boutique located on 2604 California Ave. S.W.

Her S'mores Cake is a graham cracker flavor served with toasted marshmallow crème and chocolate ganache.

It's the winning recipe that Serfass served to judges on Food Network's Cake Wars for the LEGO episode, which aired last month.

The show was part of a championship round, and the challenge was to honor the classic toy, LEGO.

Serfass, and Baked's lead cake decorator Stacey Underwood, created a giant LEGO ranger, surrounded by outdoors-themed LEGO scenes out of cake and frosting. The judges recognized the bakers for superior style and flavor and Serfass took home a $10,000 prize.

The episode was filmed in January—and aired on March 6. This was Serfass' second appearance on the show. She also won the first time—in an episode where she created a wedding cake for a couple with a design that reflected their love story.

Her "Salted Lime Margarita" flavor from "The Knot Episode"—featuring lime cake, tequila syrup, lime curd and salted lime crème is also on the menu at Baked.

The business opened in its current space in 2012, but Serfass and the bakery's co-founder Natalie Vorpahl first operated out of shared kitchen spaces.

Serfass graduated from the Art Institute of Houston, but her career path was far from ordinary.

"I knew I wanted to do culinary, but beyond that I wasn't sure," she said. "I wasn't sure which direction I wanted to go."

Serfass did know that she wanted to travel. She decided to join the Coast Guard – and was stationed on an icebreaker, the USCGC Healy in Seattle. She ended up going around the world and working in a variety of kitchens, including a Coast Guard icebreaker in the Arctic, McMurdo Station in Antarctica and a fishing camp in Alaska, as well as small specialty bakeries in between.

She met her husband Chad Serfass in the Coast Guard and eventually she decided to leave the service and start her own business with her friend Vorpahl.

"At first it was just the two of us," Serfass said. "We started off small and grew our clientele. When we started, there weren't a lot of custom cake shops in Seattle. So we had an advantage."

Baked specialized in cakes of all kinds – and the wide variety of flavors and decorative styles set the shop apart.

Chocolate salted caramel and Italian cream are two of the most popular flavors – but the menu also features the cinnamon roll cake, almond joy, pina colada, PB&J, raspberry lemonade and lavender haze.

And Serfass and her team of employees: Melissa Lewis, Ali Graham, Catie Rizzo, Taylor Neumeister and Stacey Underwood can form cakes that resemble almost anything. A photo album of past projects includes the classic stacks of white wedding cakes, some decorated with hand-painted flowers, as well as custom creations made to resemble cartoon characters, sports logos, VW busses and sea creatures.

Some of Serfass' favorite cakes were shaped to resemble other types of food, including hamburgers, trays of sushi, grilled cheese sandwiches, a bowl of salad and a stack of pancakes, topped with a pad of butter.

Serfass grew up painting and drawing for fun, and the creative spark has stuck with her. She credits her team for helping brainstorm ideas for clients.

"We look for inspiration, talk to each other and come up with different ideas," she said. "We all learn so much from each other. Everyone had a different way of doing things and a different style. We're very team-oriented."

Serfass ended up on the Food Network after she received a call from producers looking for bakeries willing to compete. She said the publicity and the prizes has helped her business grow. With her winnings, she was able to purchase much-needed equipment.

She has no plans to expand beyond the space on California Ave. She said staying small helps ensure that her products stay fresh, since everything is made to order.

West Seattle resident Marci Eversole said she is glad that Baked and Serfass were in the spotlight on Food Network.

"Kristina is definitely getting the attention she deserves," Eversole said.

Eversole first discovered the bakery in 2011 and hired Serfass to make a birthday cake for a party. She was surprised when she picked up a cake that resembled a vintage valise, complete with stitching.

"It was just incredible and so beautifully done," Eversole said. "Then we cut into it, and it was one of the best cakes I'd ever had. It was not only stunning, but the taste was fantastic. They sold me on that first cake."

She returns to the business a couple times each year to order specialty cakes – and dreams up unusual designs to challenge the bakers.

For one party, the cakes resembled a stack of various cheeses, each a different flavor inside. At another soiree with an Alice in Wonderland theme, Baked created cakes that looked like a teapot, surrounded by full teacups.

"The cakes have been the hit of every party I have," Eversole said.

She recommends Baked to all of her friends, as well. "There's nothing to compare to their artistry," she said. "And the cake and fillings are sublime. Everyone who has one of their cakes goes back for more."

Thought-provoking all-new plays by Washington playwrights engage in 2017 Bill & Peggy Hunt Playwrights Festival $10 tickets to see two plays!

For about the price of a matinee movie theater ticket, enjoy two award-winning and thought-provoking new plays live in April and May during the Playwrights Festival at Burien Actors Theatre.

The 2017 Bill & Peggy Hunt Playwrights Festival offers four weekends of four engaging new shows written by Washington State Playwrights from April 14 through May 7.

Tickets are just $10, and each ticket includes admission to two plays—a one-act followed by a full-length.

From April 14-23, the one-act "They Walk Among Us" is paired with the full-length "Escorting Tom." In the comedy "They Walk Among Us," written by Kirsten McCory and directed by Laura Shearer, Zeus and Hera start a whole new myth after falling into a suburban therapist's self-serving plot. In the comedy-drama "Escorting Tom," written by Duane Kelly and directed by Calen P. Winn, to soften the blow of leaving her socially inept husband Tom, Carol hatches an audacious plan. The project promptly fails—and succeeds—in ways she did not see coming.

From April 28-May 7, the one-act "Winter People" is paired with the full-length "The Law of the Sea." In the drama "Winter People," written by Devin Rodger and directed by Tabitha Angier, two recovering addicts struggle to find the truth—and healing—in the connection they once shared. In the drama "The Law of the Sea," written by D. Richard Tucker and directed by Rochelle Flynn, Andrew Irving died in a shipwreck, and his widow can't believe the explanation given by the surviving crew. What really happened, and just what is the "Law of the Sea"?

After each play is performed, audience members are invited to participate in a talk-back with the director and playwright. These talk-backs are an opportunity for the audience to discuss the show with its creators and for the playwrights to get an honest audience response to their work.

These shows are suggested for ages 13-plus due to some adult content and language.

Performances are Fridays and Saturdays at 7:30 p.m., and Sunday matinees at 2 p.m. at Burien Actors Theatre, 14501 4th Ave. S.W. in Burien.

The Playwrights Festival is sponsored by 4Culture, the City of Burien and Pickled & Preserved.

For tickets and other information, go to www.burienactorstheatre.org or call 206.242.5180. Burien Actors Theatre is located at 14501 Fourth Ave. S.W. in Burien.

About the Bill and Peggy Hunt Playwrights Festival

The mission of the Bill & Peggy Hunt Playwrights Festival is twofold: to encourage Washington State playwrights to pursue their craft and to showcase previously unproduced plays written by Washingtonians. Playwrights are invited to submit their scripts, which are evaluated by a panel of judges who select the winners. Burien Actors Theatre (BAT) produces the winning plays in the festival. Top winners in the one-act and full-length script categories are produced as fully staged performances on BAT's main stage.

The Festival was named to honor Bill and Peggy Hunt's dedicated service to theater and their devotion to and involvement with BAT. Peggy Hunt joined Burien's theater scene in 1960. Over the next 35 years both Bill and Peggy appeared in and directed plays, designed and built sets, served on BAT's Board of Directors, and were involved in some aspect of every theater project.

BAT officially launched the Bill & Peggy Hunt Playwrights Festival in 1999. This year, BAT has chosen four playwrights to be honored with awards.

Rickle's Tickles

PAT CASHMAN

Sometimes when a famous person 'shuffles off this mortal coil' it can be of interest—and worth noting—but not personally upsetting to most of us. It was Shakespeare who coined the 'mortal coil' expression—and he was certainly admired—but his passing didn't hit most people that hard. It happened, after all, several years before most of us were born. My uncle, for example, didn't shed a tear. On the other hand, he's never gotten over the passing of Francis Bacon.

But a man I never knew personally (although I did once get to meet him) died the other day. It hit me like someone in my own family had checked out—especially odd since Don Rickles was like no one in my actual family. He didn't remind me of my dad, a favorite cousin or a funny uncle (although he did look a lot like one of my aunts).

The story goes that when he was beginning his standup comedy career his act was that of a standard joke teller and impressionist. But when dealing with the inevitable heckler (are there professional hecklers?) Rickles began to discover that he got bigger laughs lambasting audience wiseguys than he did doing his actual show. Before he knew it, he had ditched the regular jokes and impressions and became the ultimate insult comic.

One of his great putdowns was calling someone a 'hockey puck.' Of course, there is nothing inherently wrong with a hockey puck. You can't have a good NHL game without one. But 'hockey puck' just sounds funny—and vaguely dirty. Calling someone a 'baseball' or a 'frisbee' just doesn't have the same crackle. (Although badminton fans could make a strong case for 'shuttlecock'.)

But the words he chose—and the way he said them—was part of Rickles's magic. It wasn't about jokes for Rickles—it was about attitude and energy. And he had both in great supply. It seemed to me that being called a 'hockey puck' by Don Rickles would be an honorific better than a Nobel prize.

While my teenage friends were buying rock music records, I spent my limited funds on comedy albums. I bought them all—from Jonathan Winters to Bob Newhart; George Carlin to Cheech and Chong. But it was a Rickles recording, "Hello, Dummy!," that I treasured most. That album—taken from a live Rickles's standup performance—is now nearly 50 years old. I played it so much, I had to buy a second time—I'd literally worn the grooves out.

The old album was trotted out the other day for a fresh listen. Then I remembered that my record player was packed away in a storage unit along with the landline phones, VCR's and palm pilot.

Luckily, the entire album is on YouTube these days: www.youtube.com/watch?v=sjXOe9hkDzE

It's, as they say, politically incorrect. It's at times highly offensive—and crazily inappropriate. But darned if it still doesn't make me laugh. Somehow, because it's Rickles—as a character—saying those awful things, it seems OK. Maybe it's because he was edgy to the point of absurdity. Rickles was, after all, a comedian—no one took his remarks seriously. It was not as if he were running for office.

He continued performing his stage act almost to the moment he died at age 90—the notion of retiring was never under consideration. So in 2013, when I heard that he was going to appear at the Snoqualmie Casino (Rickles loved venues like that)—my son (also a big fan) and I intentionally lined up front row seats—enhancing the chances he would single us out for a withering insult. We even finagled backstage passes so we could meet the man in person—and get personally trashed by him.

About an hour before the show, a guy in a tuxedo waved my son and me over and we were led to an area behind the stage. We looked at each other and smiled expectantly. It was like we were about to meet the Pope—if the pope was about to make an appearance at a gambling joint and tear us apart verbally.

We walked around the corner waiting to be ambushed—and suddenly there he was: The Merchant of Venom. He was wearing a robe and was seated in a chair—and looked nearly as tiny as 'Mr. Potato Head,' the character he provided the voice for in all the Toy Story movies.

"Hi ya, fellas. Good to see ya!" said Rickles in a sincere and most pleasant greeting. Disappointingly pleasant. We all made small talk for a minute or two, with Rickles displaying nothing but pure charm.

My son and I waited for something more, like "You're father and son, huh? I can see the resemblance. Too bad." But he offered nothing remotely Ricklesian—and the guy in the tuxedo started to usher us away.

Then, just as we were exiting—and nearly out of ear shot—Rickles called after us one last time. "Thanks for showing up," he said. "You hockey pucks!"

A wave of joy washed over.

It's officially, unofficial; White Center elects Geoffrey McElroy to carry the keys of the city

By Lindsay Peyton

White Center has officially named its unofficial leader.

Geoffrey McElroy has been a central figure in the community since he purchased and renovated the Triangle Pub in 2005. He has served as treasurer, vice president and president of the White Center Chamber of Commerce. And now he's been voted the "Unofficial Official Honorary Mayor of White Center."

The votes were counted on Saturday, April 1, after a debate of all the candidates, who also included Christine Spencer, Justin Cline, Brian Cooper and canine candidate Floyd Dog.

The candidates discussed a range of topics – from favorite karaoke songs and spotlight colors to changing the back-in only parking along 16th St. and the likelihood of a zombie apocalypse.

At one point, Cline encouraged the audience to vote for McElroy. "I'm not looking to win," he said. "I just want to come on top of this dog situation. If you have any pity for a human being, I'll take it."

Fun and frivolity were all part of the plan for the inauguration event, which was White Center Eagles Hall, 10452 15th Ave. S.W.

The mayoral election was a fundraiser created to benefit Jubilee Days, a downhome street festival held annually in White Center.

The candidates' efforts raised more than $4,500, co-producer Sara Green Williams said.

"It was incredible, better than expected," she said. "The turn-out was great, and the support we got was fantastic."

McElroy was also impressed with the evening. He decided to join the campaign, because he wanted to support Jubilee Days.

"I want Jubilee Days to take a step forward," he said. "I threw my hat in and started raising money. We were off to the races – and it all came down to the wire."

McElroy said the event was both successful as a fundraiser and as a way to pique interest in the community for the summer festival.

Since the inauguration, he has already been bowling wearing his official mayoral sash – and plans to don it again soon.

"I plan on going around White Center, introducing myself and seeing how the people respond," he said.

McElroy said that even though the neighborhood is not officially a city, the idea of having a mayor seems natural.

"And now I have the bragging rights," he added.

Lindsay Peyton

White Center has officially named its unofficial leader—Geoffrey McElroy was voted the "Unofficial Official Honorary Mayor of White Center" during an inauguration and fundraiser on Sat., April 1.

Williams said that now that the mayor is in office, she can focus on the programming for Jubilee Days.

"We're ready to take that good momentum and keep going with it," she said. "We're getting sponsors and vendors signed up. We're off to a good start. Now that the mayor's elected, we can plan the party."

Williams explained that Jubilee Days has been a cornerstone event for White Center, a festival that has occurred in one form or another since 1923.

This year's event is slated for July 19 through July 23—and will include a carnival, car show, main stage, beer garden, kids area, community performance stage, food court, parade and fireworks show.

Mayor McElroy wants to contribute by encouraging the diverse businesses and residents of White Center to get involved. "My goal is to make it a truly international event," he said.

But for the SeaFair Pirates who have a history of stealing the keys to various city from the mayor, McElroy issued a warning – if they ever consider coming his way, "We're not giving them the key in White Center."

Dick West thinks the City of Burien is not doing enough to control crime.

Won't back down; one man's mission to turn around crime in Burien

By Lindsay Peyton

Burien resident Dick West is not the type to give up easily, or to back down from a fight.

And he has been butting heads with the City of Burien for some time, regularly attending council meetings and always stepping up to the microphone when it's time for public comment.

He also sends regular emails to the city. In his most recent, delivered before the regular meeting on Monday, April 3, he wrote, "I believe the Council Leadership is a menace to Public Safety."

In an interview, West delved into his concerns, which center on crime in the city – and in particular, his neighborhood, known as "Area X."

"I have been making a case for making the city better," West said. "I have no interest in politics, but I know how to speak. And I'm a problem-solver."

He said that he has been tracking the city's crime for the past few years by reading police reports—and he is convinced that to help increase public safety, Burien must hire more police officers.

"What I want is the city to fulfill its obligation to maintain city services," West said. "The basic function of government is to provide services. Police are one of those critical services. It could certainly be better."

He said he wants the community to join with the city for crime reduction. "Making a noise at council is ineffective," he said. "Polarizing people is ineffective. It doesn't work. The thing to do is make a persuasive case for change."

West believes that the council, however, is polarized. "It's a way of deflecting responsibility," he said.

In his neighborhood, "Area X," West said there are empty houses, foreclosures and a need for redevelopment. "Burien just acquired a bigger area than it was prepared to cover," he said.

He added that property taxes will not be a sufficient resource to fund necessary policing costs in Area X, or the city in general.

In his letter to the council, West pointed to results from the 2016 Biannual Community Survey, which stated that 47 percent of responders want crime reduction, and 26 percent want more police and enforcement.

"Your refusal to act on our priorities is a sign of arrogance," he wrote. "We are paying you to make Burien safe and prosperous, not play childish games."

He then makes four recommendations to diminish crime: regulating landlords to deny gangs a place to do business in Burien, "holding slumlords accountable for tenant actions," completing foreclosure maintenance requirements and assuring rentals meet minimum occupancy standards.

"My intent is simply to live in a city that does what it says it's going to do," West said. "I don't think the council understands the power it has. It's ineffective. It doesn't do its job. Turning the city around should be straightforward. It's about doing what the customer is asking them for."

Burien's interim city manager Tony Piasecki reads all of West's letters.

"Mr. West is very concerned about his community, the service he receives and in particular, public safety," Piasecki said. "He's looking for ways to encourage the city to invest more and raise funds for law enforcement."

Piasecki pointed to a March letter that read, "I believe your inaction has caused Burien to become insolvent, thus preventing the city from meeting Boundary Review Board obligations to the Residents of Burien and Area X. I have asked the Governor's Office to assist in placing Burien in Chapter 9 Reorganization to compel you to meet Burien's corporate Annexation obligations."

"He's hit upon this idea of bankruptcy," Piasecki said. "It's an interesting approach. But we have a balanced budget. To say we're insolvent, because we don't have enough public services, doesn't work."

Piasecki added that crime is a top priority to the city. "Dealing with public safety and crime is very complex," he said. "The answers are complex. It's not as simple as adding a number of police officers. The answer is more about trying to figure out why crime is happening in the community."

He encourages concerned citizens to form neighborhood watches. "Crime is a business," he said. "What we have to do is make the cost of doing that business high or make it difficult to do business."

It's a great place to meet!

What killed Pronto?

JEAN GODDEN

They called it Pronto! It was Seattle's bicycle-sharing system and it was a disaster. Hard to fathom why a city like Seattle, proud of being green, couldn't make a cycle-sharing system work. Why did Pronto fizzle after just two and a half years of operation?

Was it Seattle's rainy climate or its steep hills?

Was it the clunky bicycles that were hard to maneuver?

Was it the cloud cast over the system by Seattle Transportation Department Director Scott Kubly's previous position with Alta Bike Share and his failure to comply with Seattle ethics laws?

Or was it station placement and the county's helmet law that discouraged ridership? (King County law requires riders to wear helmets or face a $102 ticket.)

I have repeatedly asked myself those questions because—and here's a confession—I was there from the beginning. When the system launched on Oct. 13, 2014, I was not only a Seattle councilmember but one of three members of the Council's Transportation Committee.

I can recall the flood of optimism that preceded the launch of Pronto. The system started out as a promising idea from Puget Sound Bike Share. The non-profit organization was established as a private-public partnership controlled by a 13-member board with representatives from local transportation agencies as well as corporate sponsors.

Holly Hauser, PSBS's executive director, appeared at Transportation Committee meetings and gave optimistic reports about acquiring corporate sponsors like Alaska Air and landing national and state grants. She projected that, in the first year alone, Pronto would realize 446,000 trips and sign up 4,000 members at $85 apiece. The nonprofit took out loans and ordered 500 bikes branded with the Alaska Airlines logo. Picked to operate Pronto and its 54 stations was Motivate (formerly known as Alta Bike Share.)

The plans sounded aspirational; but, given backers' enthusiasm, it looked as if one should either get aboard or look anti-progressive. The council opted for the former and voted approval for locating bike stations on city streets and sidewalks.

However, when the first year's figures were reviewed in 2015, there was unsettling news. Memberships were lagging and there had been only 142,846 trips, far below projected numbers. As some pointed out, most enthusiastic cyclists already owned bicycles and were unlikely to use the heavier rentals.

Another problem was logistical. Users tended to ride down steep downtown hills and leave bicycles at stations along the waterfront. That forced Motivate to collect bicycles by van and redistribute them to the uphill stations, a costly, labor-intensive operation.

When PSBS finally crunched the numbers in 2015, Pronto was revealed to be insolvent. Supporters rallied and persuaded the city of Seattle to buy the troubled system for $1.4 million. City officials blamed the bicycles, heavy and difficult to maneuver on congested streets. To salvage bike share, officials sought bids for a replacement system. Last September, they selected Bewegen, a Quebec company, and touted a plan with electric bikes and 100 docking stations.

But it was too late. While drafting the 2017 budget, the Seattle City Council cut the mayor's proposed $5 million bike share allocation in half and set a March 31, 2017, deadline for Pronto to close.

A City Council majority still favored rescuing the system, although it had been discovered that membership numbers, said to be 3000, had dwindled to 1900. (The city was spending $736 per member.) Bucking the majority, councilmembers Tim Burgess and Lisa Herbold cast negative votes. Burgess said, "With limited public dollars these resources are better used to develop safe routes to school."

In January, after the city had reportedly spent $2,227,726 on bike share, the Mayor agreed with critics and pulled the plug on Pronto. He said the money would be shifted to critical bike and safety improvements.

The question remains: What killed Pronto?

In my own view, the system's death appears a combination of factors. In a way, Seattle was a victim of its own reputation, unwilling to challenge an appealing environmental idea. That hubris likely led to the city's failure to properly vet the project, presented by a non-profit and backed by politically powerful forces.

Bicycle lobbyists continue to lament that Seattle, first Northwest city with a bike share, now has none. Meanwhile cities such as Portland and Vancouver, B.C., are implementing their plans. Someday, Seattle may yet have a successful bike share system. But it should be far more carefully analyzed and designed.

Sibling rivalry

AMANDA KNOX

In my pre-teens, I chose to ignore the sour tang that had crept into my relationship with my little sister Deanna. I dismissed her suddenly miserable, disdainful attitude towards me like it was nothing more than one of her frequent bouts of car-sickness. She'd get over it.

It's not like I had done something. In fact, from the way she seemed to be angry with me about everything, I deduced that her frustration wasn't really directed at what I did, but at me. Me personally. And it was baffling. What happened to the kid who crawled into my bed whenever she had a nightmare? The little girl who counted on me to look after her on the playground, and be her voice when she was too shy to speak? Why didn't she like me anymore?

The answer was obvious to everyone else. "It's just sibling rivalry," the adults said.

"Don't take it personally." But it felt personal, and I was at turns skeptical and angry. I wasn't competing with my sister, so why should she compete with me?

Now, nearly two decades later and in the thick of Deanna's wedding planning, we texted the following exchange:

Get pregnant! Tell Chris I want to be an aunt! It's 7 months till my wedding so you will be a cute pregnant belly

We don't have the means yet. Why do you want me to get prego?

So there can be a baby and I can be an auntie! Total selfish reasons!

OK, well, I get that. Totally not prego yet, though.

Damn!

It was a light-hearted exchange, but still, my sibling senses tingled. Though Deanna's and my relationship has smoothed out since our adolescence, I'm still sensitive to signs of that dreaded, unconquerable obstacle—sibling rivalry. Was this a sign? Did Deanna feel weird about getting married before me, and was she trying to compensate for that by encouraging me to have children before her? Was this in unspoken reference to her anger towards me from so long ago?

I decided to give her a call to finally get to the bottom of it. This is what she told me:

"I remember a very distinct moment when it all started. You had just graduated from eighth grade and had received that special award for being an exceptional person. And because you were the first student to ever receive that award, it seemed like it was specially made for you. I was in sixth grade at the time, at the same school, and I remember thinking, 'My sister is such a bad ass.' But then, when school started back up in September and I went into 7th grade, I was called into the office. At first I thought I was in trouble, but then the teachers said, 'We want to make sure that you don't feel like you have to live up to your sister.' I know they were trying to be supportive, but what they said had the opposite effect on me. It was at that moment that I realized that other people were comparing me to you.

"After that, I constantly compared myself to you. You got better grades in school than me. You were better at soccer. And it made me angry. I felt like, because you were better than me, people loved you more.

"I felt that way all the way through high school. I felt it right up to when you were imprisoned. On top of everything, you became famous, and I thought, 'I'm going to be defined as your little sister forever.' Meanwhile, my whole support system fell apart. Mom and Dad were freaked out and focused on saving you.

"There was too much going on. I had an identity crisis. Deep down, I knew that my insecurities were coming from within me. I had to figure myself out, or else fall into a bad place. I had to make a decision.

"So I did. I thought, 'No. I'm not just Amanda Knox's little sister. I'm Deanna Knox.' And it was such a relief, not to compare myself anymore."

So why all the baby talk? I asked.

"Well, I realized that a lot of the attention you've received hasn't been good. I want you to have big, positive moments in your life, too. And besides that, you and Chris are great together and I can't wait to be an auntie."

Thank you, Deanna. I love you, too.
